

Straight answers for the person whose name is on the referral.

CoCoparent is a shared record of a child's days for separated parents who cooperate. Recommending an app to a client is a small act of trust, so here is what it is, what it is not, and what happens to the data, in plain terms. Every statement below is true of the live service on the date printed at the foot.

Is it a court record or evidence?

No. There is no message thread, no tone monitoring, no certified export and no timestamp presented as proof. It is a record two parents keep together, and the store listing and the app both say it is for parents who already cooperate. Families in dispute are better served by the court-oriented products, and we say so to parents too.

Could it be subpoenaed?

Anything a parent keeps can be requested in litigation, this included, exactly as their text messages can. We make no claim that it is privileged or protected, and we would tell a parent that if asked.

Can one parent lock the other out, or rewrite the past?

Both parents are members of one family record. Neither can remove the other. A change to the custody pattern takes effect only when both parents agree to it in the app. Leaving removes the person, not the record.

Where is the data, and who can see it?

On Google Cloud in the eastern United States, encrypted in transit and at rest, readable only by the two parents' accounts under published security rules. No advertising, no sale of data, no third-party analytics or tracking code in the app; the only usage figures we keep are daily counts with no names in them.

Is it a medical record? HIPAA?

No. Parents may note a dose or a doctor's visit the way they would in a text, but CoCoparent is not a healthcare provider and does not hold medical records; it is a family's own notes.

How does a family leave?

Settings, Account Removal. It asks for the password, then removes that parent; when the last parent leaves, the family record is deleted. Photos are gone within seven days. Premium families can export everything first: the log as a spreadsheet, the calendar, and the handoff summaries as PDFs.

What does it cost a family?

Free for one child, indefinitely. Premium is $9.99 a month or $79.99 a year for the whole family, one subscription covering both parents. Your code gives a family three months of Premium free; after that it renews unless cancelled, in the App Store or Google Play, never with us. A family that has ever subscribed keeps its full history for good.

What do you get for recommending it?

There is no referral fee and nothing to sign, on purpose. Professionals who recommend CoCoparent are welcome as early feedback partners, telling us what would better serve the families you work with. We learn nothing about which of your clients use it beyond an anonymous count of how many times your code was redeemed.

Who is behind it, and will anyone answer?

Scott Holbrook, a separated parent in Durham who built it for his own two-home family, through Common Ground Studio, LLC. Email to hello@cocoparenthq.com is read by a person and answered within a business day. The privacy policy and terms are on the website; the security rules are public.

What if the family's situation changes?

If it turns high-conflict, this is the wrong tool and we say so: OurFamilyWizard or TalkingParents is the right referral for a court-supervised record. The family exports what it has and leaves.

Try it in five minutes

A shared preview family with six weeks of example days already logged, two children on a 2-2-3 schedule. Write to us for a login, then sign in on the website or in the app; nothing you do there is kept. A short walkthrough is on the same page.
